

Tamara Rader, MLIS is an Advisor with the James Lind Alliance, a global initiative which brings together patients and families, with physicians and other health care providers in Priority Setting Partnerships to discuss priorities in research that focus on the interests and needs of those directly affected by health and social care. The guiding principles of the James Lind Alliance are the equal involvement of diverse perspectives, transparency of the prioritization process, and a commitment to adding to the evidence base. Tamara is an Engagement Officer at Canada's Drug Agency with experience in patient and public engagement, information retrieval, knowledge translation and communications. She coordinates equitable and transparent involvement of patients, and patient organizations, clinicians, clinician groups and industry partners into the drug reimbursement decisions of public health plans, and health technology assessments of medical interventions and programmes.

Tamara is a health research librarian with expertise in search methods for questions of efficacy and effectiveness for interventions in health, medicine and education, and social sciences. Tamara has a Master's degree in Library and Information Studies from McGill University in Montreal, Canada.
